At Last! ALL THE CRITICS AGREE

NEW YORK TIMES:

"Vivid pictures startle. Those who went to the Selwyn Theatre were surprised and often delighted. A jug marked 'Ire' was seen extending from the screen out into the audience. A dragon stretched his weird form over the orchestra pit. All startlingly realistic."

NEW YORK HERALD:

"So perfect was the sensation of depth and volume produced by this invention by Laurens Hammond that when objects came far forward on the screen they seemed to project out into the audience, and the onlooker had an impulse to reach out and seize them. A typical Winter Garden show without the expense of a runway."

NEW YORK WORLD:

"We give it a vote of appreciation. It is a most interesting device. The flicker of the usual film play is done away with almost entirely."

MORNING TELEGRAPH:

"The entire program is worth seeing. Much more living than anything heretofore attempted in cinematography. After seeing the Televue we feel the possibilities of the motion picture have not been touched. In fact one must feel his education is neglected until he sees this new dimension."

NEW YORK TRIBUNE:

"Plain geometrical circles seemed to dance right through the theatre, row by row. A simple question mark played dazzling tricks with the vision, and a dragon spat flames right into the body of the theatre."

THE EVENING MAIL:

"It is almost startling. It seemed fairly to shoot out over the heads of the audience. One was tempted to stretch out a hand, it seemed so easy to reach. A dragon—a tremendous beast—seemed to hover over the very heads of the audience. Amazing realism!"

EVENING WORLD:

"Something absolutely new. There has been great interest in the film industry in the Televue, and it seems that its inventors have done exactly what they promised. At times it seemed as though the characters were lifelike enough to step off the screen."

EVENING GLOBE:

"Nothing short of startling. The clearness and depth of the pictures are remarkable. One of these, the making of a character appearing to reach or walk out of the picture, is especially effective and never failed to arouse the people present last night to something akin to cheers. Taking it all in all, the Televue is most certainly something worth seeing."

EVENING JOURNAL:

"The effect given the living shadow dancers was startling. The unaided eye they were the shadow dancers of our childhood, but through the Televue they seemed like fairy creatures rhythmically dancing before, instead of behind, white curtain. At times they gave the illusion of winging their way above the audience, which was delighted by the illusion."

EVENING TELEGRAM:

"It brings out the characters and scenery to a degree of proficiency that is next to nature. 'M.A.R.S.' is a dream cinema in which Grant Mitchell and Margaret Irving play the leading roles. It is a comedy worth seeing."
